Calcarea carbonica - preparation from the middle layer of the oyster shell.

Patient K., 55 years old, complained of increased fatigue, swelling, nagging pain in the hip joints, periodic nocturnal heartbeats, anxiety (about work and the health of loved ones). Periodic insomnia was noted from 2 am to 4 am with sleep disturbance and nightmares. The patient also complained of a periodic increase in blood pressure to 160/100 mm Hg, increased body weight (after the death of her mother from cancer), heartburn.

Objective studies (ultrasound) showed the presence of a picture of a nodular goiter, as well as a polyp in the gallbladder.

Previously, for 1.5 years, treatment using bioresonance exogenous and endogenous therapy was unsuccessful. The volume of the thyroid gland doubled, and a new node was formed. After discontinuation of treatment, complaints came back.

Examination by R. Voll's method revealed significant changes in the meridians of the kidneys, liver, gallbladder and triple heater of the system. The ART method showed the presence of a geopathogenic load of 3 degrees, the presence of benign tumors, 1 tbsp. cancer alertness and stress load 4 tbsp.

The therapy, carried out for 2 months, included a bioresonance drug for correcting the influence of geopathogenic load, recorded from the patient with a dose of thyroid serum and Calcareous carbonic 30.

Control ultrasound and radioisotope scanning showed the absence of pathology of the thyroid gland, and the polyp of the gallbladder was halved in size.

However, anxiety, heartburn, periodic sleep disturbance and pain in the hip joints along the liver meridian persisted. From the mental symptoms, the patient noted the complexity of decision-making and conflict situations arising at work.

Appointments: bioresonance preparation with the addition of Bach Flowers (Holly) and essences of Rostok (Peace and Joy, Weight Reduction), Aurum muriaticum 3 and Calcarea carbonica 200, as well as diet, Tykveol and Erinskaya mineral water.

Control ultrasound 2 months later showed no gallbladder polyp. The patient notes a decrease in body weight, normalization of sleep, a decrease in joint pain. Psychologically, resistance to stressful situations has increased.

Conclusion: the occurrence of organic pathologies in the body is a natural stage in the development of functional (meridian energy) violations, with a decrease in the adaptation reserves of a specific functional system and disruption of the drainage mesenchymal regulatory systems. Both external (environmental) and internal factors can lead to blocking the operation of functional energy systems.

- thoughts and feelings of a person. For Calcareo carbonici psychologically characterized by the desire to close and organize their own world, as well as the presence of a huge number of children's fears. As they grow up, fears are pushed into the subconscious. lead to increased anxiety for loved ones, energetic emotional ties in the family, and at work to conscientious hyperresponsibility. With decompensation, irritability, aggressiveness, which subsequently develops into depression and manifests itself in the pathology of the liver and gallbladder.

The use of bioresonance therapy helps to overcome the influence of external factors on the human body and makes it possible to successfully search for the true resemblance of a disease and a homeopathic preparation.
