Studies on the mutual influence of the environment, including things and objects, and humans have recently become especially relevant and are encountered quite often.

Indeed, entering into physical contact with objects of the surrounding world, a person leaves their "phantom marks" on them - pieces of skin, droplets of saliva, traces of proteins and enzymes, "scraps" of their own DNA (chromosomal tails).

And also, in addition to physical, even microscopic, own particles, a person leaves information about objects and materials with which he was in contact earlier, "recharging" the electromagnetic field of these objects.

This process is similar to the signals of a radio beacon that reproduces synchronized-phased frequencies in the earth's magnetic field and has a two-way communication with a person.

Since a person is a synchronized-phased object (system), he also leaves synchronized-phased marks, unique only for a particular organism, which, in turn, facilitates the recognition of objects in space.

A medium capable of retaining such marks is water, which is contained in everything that surrounds us, as well as some other media that can change their molecular magnetic vector, i.e. having a "magnetic memory".

With the help of precise equipment, it is already possible to prove that any item made by hand is not only a certain material image - an object that has a shape, color, smell and other qualitative characteristics, but it also carries a phantom image of a master manufacturer.

And our practice as interior designers is replete with relevant examples.

For example, a family moves to a new, just renovated apartment, where the interior is carefully thought out, colors are correctly selected and proportions are chosen, where furniture and decorative items are either newly acquired (ie, "without someone else's history"), or those with which the family has only good memories.

It would seem that in such a situation, the well-being of happy new settlers should only improve against the background of the general positive atmosphere associated with the holiday of resettlement to a new and beautiful home.

However, quite often it happens that right after the move, health deteriorates, some diseases become aggravated and all this negatively affects the general mood.

And the reason for this lies not only in the normal physiological reaction of the human body to certain loads (physical, as well as stressful) which, as a rule, accompanies any move.

We must take into account that construction work is usually carried out in the new premises for a certain period of time, and it means that building mixtures were mixed and applied to the walls, wallpaper was pasted, ceilings were painted.

Many construction and finishing processes, one way or another, are associated with the use of liquid mixtures (plasters, adhesives, paints), one of the main components of which is water.

And since the water molecule is a universal tool for the accumulation and transfer of information, therefore, when preparing mixtures and working with them, workers are directly involved in energy-information exchange and transfer their physiological and spiritual state to the treated surfaces at a given time.

Over time, as the mixtures dry, phantom images of workers, their energy-information imprints (contours) remain in the molecular-crystal lattice of materials, which subsequently naturally take part, along with interior items, in the formation of the general energy-information field of the room, which fundamentally has an active effect on the residents.

If everyone in the construction team was healthy and in a good mood, phantom images should not cause acute negative consequences, but what if someone was upset or sick, or the work process was accompanied by a "showdown"?

That is why our ancestors, in addition to special rituals, preceding construction works, as well as accompanying them, there was a tradition "Tranquility" (harmonizing the resonant premises, magnetization reversal) new which has come down to us as a rite of passage consecrations.

These traditions not to be neglected these days. Can i to use wonderful devices of the firm "IMEDIS".

Practical cases:

1. Client M. asked to normalize the atmosphere at the dacha parents, in which a lot of money was invested, however, despite the beautiful architectural and decorative solutions, the family could not spend more than a day in this house without quarrels, everyone slept poorly.

A special condition was that the client's parents did not want cooperation and did not believe in the method.

Therefore, for the "treatment" of the premises, only the autonomous device IMEDIS-BRT-A, which we have, was used, as well as polaroid photographs of family members in good health and good mood.

The procedure was carried out in the dining room combined with the kitchen. Within an hour and a half, general negative information was destroyed, and then, within half an hour, family members, including pets (three dogs), were "registered".

As a result, the next weekend, the parents unexpectedly stayed overnight at the dacha, returned cheerful and vigorous, and the whole family began to visit their country house much more often.

2. Clients G., a young couple, purchased an already refurbished and a practically furnished apartment, while increasing the status of the area of residence and the quality of housing, however, the state of health immediately worsened, especially for the hostess, and she also began to have serious problems at work.

In fact, three days before the decisive events in the service, the family turned to us with a request for emergency assistance in the resulting ambiguous situation. Time to work with the premises according to the method of "interior therapy®" was not there, so we suggested "emergency cleaning".

As in the previous case, within an hour and a half, information was "erased" from the room, interior, personal belongings, and then the family members and the cat were "registered".

As a result of the "treatment", the situation at the service during the next month was resolved positively, the hostess received a very large material reward, which allowed her to seriously take care of her own health, since the family plans to have a child in the near future.
